COL. BAKER IN PRISON.

A Quebec paper publishes an account of an interview which its correspondent states he has had with Col. Baker. He says:

"Col. Baker received me courteously, coming to the door of his room and extending his hands, which I shook warmly. 'I am glad to see you,' he said, smiling, as he threw himself in his robe de chambre, on a sofa near the barred window. 'You are an American, and do you know I have been thinking, when my sentence is over, of visiting your country, perhaps to remain there. I do not deceive myself, to the contrary of my sentence. I know I cannot live in England with any comfort. This wretched affair will pursue me even should I wish to enter any other army. I have understood that the Khedive would give me my possition in one of his native regiments, but I want no prominence. A quiet nook on the Continent or America are the only two things open to me.' The Colonel stopped talking. He spoke like a thoroughly despairing man. I was surprised at the open manner in which he spoke of his misfortune. I asked him what he thought of his sentence. 'It is a very severe one,' he answered; 'more perhaps, in its effects than in itself. I have believed all along that the climax made about my case would prejudice it in the minds of a common jury. I am still of that opinion. Had it not been reminded that the Prince of Wales and others were exerting its influence to save me, I believe that more consideration would have been taken of my services, and that simply a fine would have been inflicted.' But Mr. Justice Brett, who evidently wished to spare me degradation when he said by brilliant deeds I might rehabilitate myself, did not realize that imprisonment was fatal to me. Many innocent assaults were not punished by imprisonment. He obeyed the popular clamor, and no doubt thought he would be accused of partiality did he not condemn me to the extreme penalty of the offense. 'In this way I made a sacrifice to the cry of 'one law for the rich and poor alike.' I do not accuse you, Judge, and I foresaw this.
It is the reason why I wanted a special jury.
I should no doubt have been found guilty, but the disgrace of imprisonment might have been spared me.' 'Have you received any marks of sympathy since the sentence?' 'Yes, a great many.
My former brother officers have again and again assured me of their good will, and I have received many letters from friends endeavoring with misfortune. To myself I do not attempt to condemn it, and I shall never cast a word of blame on the lady who has brought it all on me.
I am man enough to know, even though I suffer for it, that under all circumstances she could not do otherwise than she did. I only think it hard that one moment of forgetfulness should destroy the honorable record of a whole life. Had Miss Dickson not been pushed to it I feel confident she wished to spare me, and I feel thankful for her generous impulse. But with the noise made over it all, she was forced to sacrifice me to her own reputation. She is a pure, good girl, and as you saw I never attempted to controvert a word she said.'"

STONEWALL JACKSON'S DEATH BED.

Dr. Hunter McGraw, who attended Stonewall Jackson during his last hours, has published a full account of the event, from which the following extracts are made: "About daylight on Sunday morning Mrs. Jackson informed him that his recovery was very doubtful, and that it was better that he should be prepared for the worst. He was silent for a moment, and then said, 'It will be infinite gain to be translated to heaven.' He advised his wife in the event of his death to return to her father's house, and added: 'You have a kind and good father, but there is no one so kind and good as your Heavenly Father.' He still expressed a hope of his recovery, but requested her, if he should die, to have him buried in Lexington, in the Valley of Virginia. His exhaustion increased so rapidly that at 11 o'clock Mrs. Jackson knelt by his bed and told him that before the sun went down he would be with his Saviour. He replied: 'Oh, no. You are frightened, my child. Death is not so near. I may yet get well.' She fell over the bed, weeping bitterly, and told him again that the physicians said there was no hope. After a moment's pause he asked her to call me. 'Doctor, Anna informs me that you have told her that I am to die to-day; is it so?' When he was answered he turned his eyes towards the ceiling and gazed for a moment or two, as if in intense thought, then replied: 'Very good, very good; it is all right.' He then tried to comfort his almost heart-broken wife, and told her he had a good deal to say to her, but he was too weak.
Col. Pendleton came into the room about one o'clock, and he asked him, 'Who was preaching at headquarters to-day?' When told that the whole army was praying for him, he replied: 'Thank God, they are very kind.' He said: 'It is the Lord's day; my wish is fulfilled.
I have always desired to die on Sunday.' His mind now began to fail and wander, and he frequently talked as if in command upon the field, giving orders in his old way; then the scene shifted, and he was at the staff table in conversation with members of his staff; now with his wife and child; now at prayers with his military family. Occasional intervals of return of his mind would appear, and during one of them I offered him some brandy and water, but he declined it, saying, 'It will only delay my departure and do no good; I want to prepare my mind to the last if possible.' About 1:30 o'clock he was told that he had but two hours to live, and he answered again feebly but firmly: 'Very good; it is all right.' A few moments before he died he cried out in his delirium: 'Order A. P. Hill to prepare for action.' 'Pass the infantry to the front rapidly!'
'Tell Major Hawk'—then stopped, leaving the sentence unfinished. Presently a smile of ineffable sweetness spread itself over his pale face, and he said quietly and with an expression as if of relief: 'Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees,' and then, without pain or the least struggle, his spirit passed from earth to the God who gave it."

When the last rose of summer Is faded and gone,
And the blue bottled hummer Lies dead as a stone;
When the maddens and stingers Take umbrage and go;
Oh! tell us, why lingers
The wild mus qu to?
